Description:

Raglan BESS is a 500 MW / 2,000 MWh battery energy storage system approximately 40 km north-west of Gladstone. The project comprises lithium-ion battery storage units housed in containerised enclosures, associated bidirectional inverters and transformers, a switchyard for switching and voltage transformation, an operations and maintenance building, and a new site access track off Gentle Annie Road. The BESS will connect via underground transmission cables to the Powerlink Raglan Substation (275 kV).

The project delivery approach will be either a full wrap EPC or split contract (Key equipment supply and Balance of Plant) via a competitive process to occur in 2027. Grid connection works will be procured directly with Powerlink as network operator.

Procurement is expected to commence from Q2–Q3 2027, with construction anticipated to take 18–24 months.

No Australian Government funding, grant or investment is proposed for the project.
